PRACTICE TEAM

"I definitely feel that I have an edge [over other construction lawyers]. Construction cases are very fact-intensive. But my engineering background gives me a shorter learning curve and the ability to process information more efficiently."

"There's a lot of communication and cohesion within the construction law department. My experience was a true apprenticeship that gave me all the support I needed to hit the ground running."

"Those four years were a life-changing experience. Challenging, yes... but absolutely worthwhile."

TO A CAREER IN CONSTRUCTION LAW

THE BRICKER & ECKLER CONSTRUCTION FELLOWSHIP

an opportunity that puts you

AHEAD OF THE PACK

Are you an engineer or architect interested in transitioning to construction law? Concerned about how to make the move?

You can not drop everything to be a full-time law student. But your day job should be more than just a way to pay tuition. Lay the foundation for your legal career with the Bricker & Eckler Construction Fellowship program.

Offered in conjunction with the Capital University Law School, this program combines part-time study with full-time immersion in a real-world construction law department. For a Bricker & Eckler Construction Fellow, every day presents new ways to apply and understand legal concepts. In the classroom and on the job, attorneys offer support and advice. Learning is a continual process.

This prestigious fellowship is awarded to a few engineers and architects every year. These Bricker & Eckler Construction Fellows:

- Attend law school part-time through Capital University's evening division
- Work during their first year of law school as legal assistants in Bricker & Eckler's construction law department
- Become eligible for a law clerk position after the first year
- Gain the opportunity to become a Bricker & Eckler associate upon graduation

As new associates, former Fellows are ahead of their peers in several important ways. They begin their legal careers with:

- Four years of directly related, paid job experience
- A wealth of client contacts and professional relationships
- The ability to hit the ground running and work efficiently with the Bricker & Eckler construction department

If a construction law career is in your future, take the fast track to success through a Bricker & Eckler Construction Fellowship.

Admission Requirements

Bricker & Eckler awards between one and three Fellowships per year, depending upon department needs and forecasts.

Successful applicants will have:

- A technical background in engineering, architecture, or construction management
- Field experience (preferred)

Although this program was designed for students enrolling at Capital, the Recruiting Committee may also accept transfer students on a case-by-case basis, or current students with the appropriate technical background and experience.
